Course Description

The first year of the 21 century witnessed the return of China to the international trading system, along with its growing influence in almost every aspect of our lives. This course serves as an introduction to the study of the rise of China and its impacts on both the analytics and empirics of international political economy. It selects several key issue areas where China has not only become a critical factor that cannot be ignored, but also posed some challenges to the conventional wisdom. This course will be organized around seven topics including trade policy, natural resource trade, diplomacy and trade, foreign direct investment, and policy diffusion. Except the weeks devoted to introduction and student presentations, the rest of the weeks are further divided into seven two-week units. For the first week of each unit, the class discusses general theories related to the topic chosen for that week. In the week that follows, we apply these theoretical perspectives to the Chinese case and assess if they still have explanatory power or need to be revised. In other words, this advanced seminar not simply asks students to know what had happened after China’s rise, but also encourages them to challenge the received paradigms people have taken for granted for a long time.
